y We collect data in various ways from World of Warcraft: Classic. Activision Blizzard does not provide a direct way (API) to collect player information like they do in other version of the game such as Retail WoW. This tool is advisory and player data takes time to update. We use 'who', 'inspect' alongside the WoW forums to collect player data. Updated: 11 months ago Article ID: 83237 You can use the Wowhead Profiler to view information about your character's equipment and stats, locate lost pets or mounts, and view your quest and achievement history. Enter your realm and character name to load your character in the Profiler. Note: Wowhead Profiler uses data from the World of Warcraft Army. Your character's information may not be accurate if your Army hasn't been updated. After your character loads, you can select a tab to view the details of your character. Refer to the following section for details on each tab. Equipment Set This tab shows your character's model; their current gear, including enchants, gems, and transmog; and their relevant stats. Mounts This tab shows your current mount collection. You can filter the collection using the options above the table. Clicking a mount takes you to the mount's information page on Wowhead where you can view player comments and see where the mount drops. Battle Pets Like the Mounts tab, this shows your current collection of battle pets. You can use the available tools to sort, search, and filter your collection. Recipes This tab shows the list of crafting recipes your character knows, broken out by profession. Like the other tabs, there are filters you can use to find specific recipes. Quests This tab shows completed, and incomplete, quests, broken out by continent. You can click a quest to view its information on Wowhead, including where it starts, if it's part of a chain, and the quest's rewards. Achievements / Titles / Reputation These tabs show your characters progress in each category. The achievements, titles, and reputations shown apply only to the character you're viewing, even if the achievement is account-wide. Talents This tab shows your character's current talent build and a list of the available skills and glyphs for that build. Click the tab to switch between your two specializations. I see some people are able to tell what server people are from and things like their achievements and gear. I know there used to be an army you could get to by clicking on a person's icon. But that doesn't see to work any more. So how do you look up the info? 5 Likes 4 Likes If you hover your mouse cursor over the forum character's name, you'll see the URL in the status window at the bottom of your Web browser that includes the server name. 3 Likes I just hit reply. ...like i see this char is on skeram cuz ur whymsy-skoram i c u 7 Likes Thanks so much for your help guys!! Just to expand, people can only see your name and server. If you show your helm/shoulder they can hazard a guess as to gear, but gear can only be seen by finding the toon in game and inspecting and there are no achievements in Classic. 2 Likes Is there no army for Classic? Does army still exist in the current game? Nope. Yep. Just go to the main site and type a retail character name into the search bar. Army has been integrated as part of the search and site experience. Thundathighs: Warcraft logs gives a snapshot of their gear set up. That's a good point as well. You can see what it looks like here: last&type=summary&source=31 and use the search bar for specific people, servers, or guild stats. 4 Likes Warcraft logs gives a snapshot of their gear set up. You guys are so helpful. another question - it seems some people post from a character they have in retail - how would I grab one of my old ones? If it's on the same account, click your avatar icon in the top right of the screen and at the bottom of the pop-out sidebar select 'Change character.' That will populate a list of your toons on the account, then click the one you want to post on. This, also wanted to add that if it doesn't switch your character, you may have to log out/back in on the forum to get it to change. 1 Like May be worth noting, that a person only shows up there if they do raid logs. There was a classic army addon/website being made, but i think it maybe died? It would have let you export yourself and publish to the website, sort of like how classic guild bank works. If you really want to check them out just look at their army on ironforge(dot)pro. It can take time to update because you sometimes have to manually update the toon, but it's there! Those pointing out warcraft logs should also point out that will only show the relevant gear worn during the raid log event. 90% of my game time I am in my World/PvP gear, my PvE/Raid healing setup is different with a few exceptions. Yea but Important note: only players seen on Warcraft Logs are available! so, this also only covers people who log, or remember to log best general thing i can find is using wowheads client, and exporting your character, but people cant go look you up Gythriel: There was a classic army addon/website being made, but i think it maybe died? That's sad. I can still look up all my old ancient toons in EQ on Magolo. You know what's fun? Uploading made-up logs. They're pretty easy to fake and you can really mess with the stats on Warcraft Logs. 2 Likes And get deleted fast by the mods ie wasting your effort. Grats on being a 14 year old? 1 Like Ahh but how would they know? Anyone can upload to Warcraft Logs and there's little to no validation. The data on that site is not worth much because of this. There's pretty much no way they can validate logs so long as the uploads are formatted properly and are self-consistent. I know of a few people deliberately skewing the stats on there because it suits their whimsy. 1 Like next page –
