The Cornell Cooperative Extension (CCE) puts knowledge of work in search of economic vitality, ecological sustainability and social well-being. Root in every county of the state, we bring together local experiences and research-based solutions, helping together the families and communities of New York State and communities in our rapidly evolving world. With a presence in every county and all five New York City neighborhoods, CCE is uniquely positioned to adapt to opportunities and resources to match the different needs and changing of individual state communities. Whether you are a student or a company that considers participation in the program, I hope you will catch our sense of excitement about the good things that happen here! The cooperative training program (Co-OP program) offers an academic learning experience structured to university students. For over 100 years, cooperative education has been a learning program rewarding. In 1906, the Faculty of Engineering of the University of Cincinnati implemented an experiential education component to the engineering curriculum that offered students the opportunity to learn and work under a mentor in their field of study. This learning-easy model continues to make sense today and over 1000 students in Clemson are currently participating! Learning-Learning is about the engaging academic material from a different perspective. It offers students the opportunity to apply part of the theory learned in classes. Adds a contextual dimension to the material, resulting in deeper understanding. Clemson's program is a traditional cooperation program with the experience of each student who is monitored by the academic staff of the program. In addition, the work experience that students enter into their field is significant and many of our students continue to work for their cooperative employers on graduation. Participation in the program also makes sense for companies and we hope you think you join us as a teaching partner! Please enjoy exploring our web pages and if you want more information, please feel free to contact us. Again, we welcome you!
