Are you looking to watch basketball by streaming the NBA or college hoops instead of watching cable each month? Good news! It's entirely possible to accomplish this without a cable or satellite company dime. In this article, I'll walk you through all the ways that you can cut the cord and remain as big a basketball fan as ever. Table of Contents If you're a NBA fan, you probably know there are a couple of different ways to watch the league's games. The NBA airs games on channels such as ESPN, ABC, TNT and NBA TV that are considered "national broadcasts." If you want to watch these games without cable or satellite, you'll need a live TV streaming service that offers these channels as a part of the subscription. YouTube TV offers all four for $64.99. If your favorite team isn't playing in a game that airs nationwide, you're likely going to find it on a regional sports network (RSN). These channels can be a little trickier to find on live TV streaming services, but I'll walk you through them later in the article. NBA League Pass: Stream Most Out-of-Market Regular Season Games If you don't live in the local market for your favorite NBA team, your best path to streaming the league without cable is probably the NBA League Pass. This service allows you to stream non-nationally televised and out-of-market NBA games for either a monthly or season-long subscription fee. The season-long subscription price is $199. Before you sign up for the service, NBA League Pass will have you enter your ZIP code into its blackout evaluator to show you all the games that you won't be eligible to stream. Here's a sample of that process: As noted in the text from that sample, someone living in my ZIP code would be prohibited from streaming the Memphis Grizzlies, Atlanta Hawks or national broadcasts on ESPN, ABC, TNT and NBA TV. That does leave the telecasts of 28 out-of-market teams for me to stream freely. So if I were a New York Knicks fan living where I live, I could stream almost their entire season with a NBA League Pass subscription. It's worth noting that you will eventually get access to blacked-out games. You can watch the on-demand replay of your local team three days after the original broadcast airs. How To Watch Your Local NBA Team Without Cable You will need access to the regional sports network that airs your favorite team in order to stream their games without paying for cable or satellite. The availability of these channels on live TV streaming services varies from market to market. Unfortunately, you may find yourself limited to just one or two streaming services that carry the channel for your local team. I have compiled a handy guide to help understand which RSN you'll need in order to watch basketball games for your local team. I've also included streaming services that offer those channels (information current as of the date of this writing). Most of these regional sports networks have apps and websites you can use to stream your local teams. However, access to the live streams of these channels usually requires login credentials from an approved cable or live TV streaming service. College Basketball: Watch the NCAA Tournament and Regular Season If you're a casual college basketball fan, there are two easy-to-define viewing periods for this sport. There's the regular season, which typically consists of approximately 30 games per team, played in both conference and non-conference settings. These games usually air on regional or league-sponsored television with the very best of them getting national coverage on channels like CBS or ESPN. Then there's the NCAA Tournament, well known as "March Madness." This is the 68-team tournament that sparks interest in bracket pools and watch parties across the nation. These games are broadcast as national telecasts on a variety of platforms. Let's walk through how to stream both portions of the college basketball season without cable. How To Stream the NCAA Tournament The men's NCAA basketball tournament is one of the most anticipated sporting events of the year. It takes place over a three-week period from mid-March into early April. Watching all of the action unfold as a streamer has never been easier. That's because the NCAA has a March Madness Live app that lets you stream the games on your favorite device. You can also access live streams directly from the NCAA's website. The NCAA typically allows several hours of free viewing, but eventually you may be asked to pay for access. If you want a more traditional NCAA tournament viewing experience, it can be done on live TV streaming services. All games of the NCAA men's basketball tournament can be watched on CBS, TNT, TBS or TruTV. You can view all four of these channels with a YouTube TV subscription. You can compare your streaming options by using our live streaming channel guide. How To Stream the College Basketball Regular Season If you're interested in the entire college basketball season, you'll be happy to know that the streaming options are plentiful. These games can be found in a variety of places, including free local channels, national and regional sports channels and even through some non-traditional streaming options. Local Channels: ABC, CBS and FOX/National Sports Channels: ESPN, ESPN2, ESPNU, FS1, FS2, CBS Sports Network and NBC Sports Network/Conference-Specific Channels:SEC Network, ACC Network, Big Ten Network and PAC-12 Network/Regional Sports Networks:Many of the networks listed above with the NBA teams also offer college basketball. There are streaming-only platforms that also carry regular-season college basketball games. You can find them on ESPN3 and the ESPN+ subscription service. The Big Ten Network and SEC Network also have streaming-only options (BTN+ and SECN+) that come with a live TV streaming subscription. Free services including Facebook Live, YouTube, Pluto TV and Stadium also have agreements to stream college basketball games on their platforms. If you have a favorite team that you're trying to stream, you may want to visit the official school website to see where to find those games. You can build a plan for streaming from the channels that appear most often to ensure you see most of the action. That's thanks to reports of injuries that are supposedly not keeping the Lakers' biggest name, and multiple teammates, off the court.Anthony Davis has a sore right eye, LeBron James is dealing with a sore right groin and Kyle Kuzma has a right ankle sprain. Reports suggest all are likely to play tonight's game.So, if those injuries work themselves out, we'll just get a straight up basketball game between a title contender and the defending champs from Toronto. LA's favored to win, as already LeBron is showing that he's taking these 'bubble' games seriously, with a strong last-minutes performance against the Clippers. While you've probably heard about the NBA's 'bubble' — where the top teams are competing for playoff spots in a facility at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Florida — you may not have heard how positive the experience has been on a testing level. On July 29, the NBA announced that for the second consecutive week there have been zero positive tests among the 344 players inside the bubble. Yes, the NBA's re-started season is continuing along, and apparently it's going well, unlike the troubled MLB season that is on the verge of collapse.Here's everything you need to watch Lakers vs Raptors live stream tonight:How to avoid Lakers vs Raptors blackouts with a VPNIf you've had to leave your own "bubble" — or you've been hit by a dreaded local blackout — and you can't watch Lakers vs Raptors live streams on cable, you're not out of luck. With a virtual private network, or VPN, you can appear to be surfing the web from your home town (or somewhere that blackouts won't hit), and access the same streaming services you already paid for. Not sure which VPN is right for you? We've tested many different services and our pick for the best VPN overall is ExpressVPN (opens in new tab). It offers superb speeds and excellent customer service. But you've got other VPN options as well. Here are our top picks.Lakers vs Raptors live streams in the USThe Lakers vs Raptors live stream is going to be easy for cable subscribers and cable-cutters alike. The game will be live on ESPN, starting at 8:30 p.m. ET / 5:30 p.m. PT. ESPN is included in most cable packages.Basketball fans should also consider getting the NBA League Pass; packages start at $20 per year but you'll need to spend $29 per year for access to all teams — minus local and national blackout games.Cord-cutters looking for the best all-encompassing streaming option will note that ESPN is available on Sling TV, one of the best streaming services around. While ESPN is in both of the $30 per month Sling Orange packages, both it and Sling Blue have certain channels hoops fans will want. The $45 per month Sling Blue + Orange package may be their best bet for a comprehensive streaming situation.Lakers vs Raptors live streams in the UKBritish hoop fans can stay up and watch Lakers vs Raptors on Sky Sports (opens in new tab). Those without Sky Sports can pick it up from Now TV (opens in new tab), with prices starting at £9.99You could also opt for NBA League Pass, which also available in the U.K., at £42.99 for the rest of the year and serves up all of the games with no blackouts.The game starts at 11:30 p.m. BST.Lakers vs Raptors live streams in CanadaCanada will watch Lakers vs Raptors on SportsNet, which is available via cable packages as well as online as a standalone purchase for streaming.
