Many Years Later facing the dismissal team, Colonel Aureliano Buendía remembered that afternoon away when his father led him to discover the ice. At that time Macondo was a village of twenty Adobe houses, built on the shore of a river of clear water that ran along a bed of polished stones, which were white and huge, like prehistoric eggs. The world was so recent that many things were missing names, and to indicate them it was necessary to bet. Every year during the month of March a family of ragged gypsies would have set up their tents near the village, and with a large uproar of pipes and timpani they would show new inventions. First they brought the magnet. A heavy gypsy with a beard and hands of untamed sparrow, which presented themselves as Melquiades, put in a bold public demonstration of what he himself called the eighth wonder of the alchemists learned of Macedonia. He went home to home dragging two swarms of metal and all were amazed to see pots, pots, tongs, and braziers tumble down from their places and beams creak from the desperation of nails and screws that try to emerge, and even objects that had been lost. For a long time it appeared where they were searched for the most part and went dragging along turbulent confusion behind Melquiades' Magic irons. "The things have a life of their own?" The gypsy proclaimed with a strong accent. "They awaken their souls?" José Arcadio Buendía, whose brazen imagination always went beyond the genius of nature and even beyond miracles and magic, thought it would be possible to use the useless invention to extract gold from the bowels of the earth. Melquiades, who was an honest man, warned him: "Very good value have enough gold and will act for this?" But José Arcadio Buendía at that time did not believe in the honesty of the gypsies, so he exchanged his mule and a pair of goats for the two magnetized swords. "Rusula Iguarájn, his wife, who relied on those animals to increase their poor domestic companies, was unable to dissuade him. "Very good value have enough gold and more to pave house floors," She's husband replied. For several months he worked hard to demonstrate the truth of him. He explored every centimeter of the region, even the river bed, dragging the two inlets of long iron and reciting Melquiades' Loud spell. The only thing he managed to do was to see a complete with fifteenth-century armor that had all his pieces welded together with rust and inside which there was a huge hop of gourd filled with stone. When José Arcadio Buendía and the four men of his expedition managed to dismount the armor, found in a calcified skeleton with a padlock of copper containing a woman's hair around his neck. The founder, José Arcadio Buendía f A, was impulsive and curious. The descendants of him have inherited these traits for years to come. In the end, Macondo lost his idyllic state when he established contact with other cities in South America. The civil wars started as a result that brought violence and death to the Pacific Macondo, previously intact by a war or violence. A descendant has become the colonel aureliano buendía f to which he drove Liberal rebels during this period of time and reached fame due to his actions during this period of civil war. Because of him (and other reasons), Macondo MacondoFrom an idyllic place in an irrevocably linked to the outside world through the notoriety associated with the name of Colonel Buendía f a f A. Governments changed several times during this period; At a certain arcadio point he ruled in a dictatorial regime until he was shot by an execution platoon; Later another mayor was appointed, whose kingdom was peaceful until Arcadio's death in battle during another civil revolt; Finally, he ended with the signing of a peace treaty between the opposite sides after his death and all the hostilities. A family that lives many important events throughout the book. Some of these include births, dead, weddings and love relationships. Most family men have an extramarital relationship at some point in their lives. Women range from those more reserved for those that come out and get what they want without fear or shame. The destiny of the family for the size remains alive in their matriarch, Ursula Iguarájn. She works hard to keep the family unite despite the differences. However, as the rest of Macondo, they are devastated by modernity and imperialism. Imperialism takes the form of a banana plantation that moves to the city and exploits its land and its workers with little regard for them and for their well-being. In the end, angry for the way they are treated, the growth of banana strikes; Thousands of them are massacred by an army that takes place with plantations owners. This leads to years of incessant rains that eventually collapse Macondo while flooding the city is struck by violence being external and internal until he could bear more. The Buendía's family becomes alienated the other and from the company in general; Self-destructive for past days nostalgia (which will never return). They live a pre-ordered cycle: great beauty intertwined with great sadness / tragedy because nothing lasts forever f A[Capoli 1 A f A]Chapter 1 centá f " years of solitude Start with Colonel Aureliano Buendía f A that recalls the first days of the foundation of Macondo. At that time, the gypsies often visited the city and carried technological wonders to amazement of all. José f A f A Arcadio Buendía f A, the founder of Macondo, became obsessed with these magical tools and began to experiment with science to discover the secret. He spent his life in search of knowledge and eventually turned into a solitary scientist, while he retreated from human contact and became transgressed, antisocial and interested only in search of knowledge. However, at some point in the life of José f A f A Arcadio Buendía f a f A you did not withdraw from society, but brought people to build their new home where you can live in peace without being disturbed by strangers or from death itself. In your knowledge research e The obsession of José f A f A Arcadio Buendía f a f A moves towards the desire to establish a contact with civilisation. Drives a north, because he knows there are only swamps to the west and south and mountains to the east. But then decides that Macondo is surrounded by water and inaccessible to the rest of the world. When he thinks of transferring Macondo to another more accessible place, he is stopped by his wife who refuses because he does not want to change their lives. Prevented from moving Macondo elsewhere or even having children other than José f A f A Arcadio (who inherited the great forces of his father) or Aureliano (later Colonel Aureliano Buendía), who seems enigmatic at first, but continues to live as a recruit. When the Gypsy return, they bring the news that Melquiades died earlier this year after returning from Europe. Despite the sadness of the news of Melquiades' death, José f A f A Arcadio Buendía does not yet lose interest in new technologies such as ice, which was one of the many wonders that occurred in those times in Latin America, where it still does not know how cold it could be around, compared to other parts of South America, such as Colombia, where people were accustomed to seeing colder temperatures, seen the ice for some reason seemed like magic simply appeared from nothing without anyone doing anything. But magically it appeared before them that made things seem pretty interesting at least then especially when you are a grown kid learning all kinds of stuff that makes you wonder if there is something else out there waiting for us somewhere beyond our reach until we learn how to find his hiding place between space and time that connects everything together no matter what breed color religion sex etc. A hundred years of loneliness book Summary, by Gabriel Garcia Marquez
