Workflowy takes list creation in a different direction: it's aimed at people who like plain documents, nesting and bullet points. When opening the app, you are presented with a blank sheet, similar to a piece of paper. From here, you can start creating lists and indenting list items to create sub-lists, and when you complete tasks, they're marked as finished by being struck through. It's great for jotting things down quickly as well. This app is still under development, so some to-do related features are still being polished up. Currently it's web only, with mobile apps in the works. - Scroll down to continue reading article - - Scroll down to continue reading article - Google Tasks is a web app that's built into Gmail. To see it, click on Mail in the top left corner of the Gmail screen, and a drop-down menu will appear from which you can select Tasks. It's a simple task management tool in which you can create different tasks, check them off, and organize due dates for each assignment. It's a basic task management tool—the main bonus being that it integrates with Google calendars quite easily to synchronize your tasks that have due dates assigned to them. Reminders Reminders is a default to-do app that comes with your Mac, iPhone, iPod or iPad. It's a task management tool that integrates with the alarm system of your device. It's easy to use and simple to create a list of tasks that need handling, with a default view for today, and the ability to create repeating tasks. This app is only available on Apple devices. Toodledo Toodledo is another one of the task management app specialists. Focused on productivity, it has 5 levels of priority for your tasks and has most of the same features as the other task management tools listed earlier. Like some of these others, this app uses folders for different lists, so you can move tasks into different folders to organize the assignments you have to complete. It provides multiple views that you can select to organize your tasks by due date, calendar, folders, or priority. This app also has a notebook feature in which you can create different types of notes, but unlike Evernote, it uses HTML markup for formatting the notes. It's available on iOS and web, and there are a bunch of third party apps on Blackberry and Android that integrate with Toodledo. Which App is Right for You? If you only ever create task lists, there is a plethora of apps beyond those listed here that you can use. Most of them accomplish the job quite well, so your preference will depend a lot on your existing task-making habits and the aesthetic of the app itself. The features that most have in common are generally due dates, and task prioritization. There are some slight differences in them, however, as some apps will use numbering for prioritization (like Toodledo) whilst others will use color (Remember the Milk, Todoist, any.do). Due dates are also used as method of prioritization (by Wunderlist, Reminders, Google Tasks, and Asana). - Scroll down to continue reading article - - Scroll down to continue reading article - Task sub-lists are another feature differentiation. Workflowy is particularly optimized for nesting and creating sublists, as are Asana and any.do. In terms of collaboration and assigning tasks to team members, Asana is specifically designed with this in mind and is much more convenient for group projects. If you want to create a wider variety of lists, then Listible and Evernote are your best bets. Evernote isn't strictly a list-making, app so it's not as easy to create lists, but its great for adding a lot more detail into your lists. Toodledo also has note-taking features, so if task management and note taking are your main needs, Toodledo would be your best choice. Listible is particularly useful and easy for creating a wide variety of lists clipped from around the web due to its bookmarklet, and also because it can display the images and links in your list. Each of these list apps has its own group of fans, because we all create different types of lists in different ways. There are a bunch of different techniques you can try to optimize how you organize your lists... but that's an article for another day. Feel free to share any list-organizing tricks that you use, and what your favorite list-making app is. Featured photo credit: Office desk via Shutterstock
