If you're an avid Discord user, you've probably heard the Discord notification sound countless times. While these notifications can be good, they are more often obnoxious. You have to listen to that double beep sound whenever someone sends a message, and if you are a part of many servers, this can become a massive distraction. Today we're teaching you how to turn off Discord notifications, sounds, and more. READ MORE: How to create and manage a Discord server Before anything, we need to talk about Discord notifications and why anyone would want to turn them off. Typically, when it comes to social media notifications, you want to leave them on. If you turn off Facebook notifications, you might miss a direct message, a tag, an important update from a Facebook group, or a birthday. If you turn off Instagram notifications on your device, you won't know when someone likes or comments on your content. However, neither of those two instances involve an incredibly irksome double beep notification sound. Curtis Joe / Android Authority Discord notifies you about everything, from messages in threads to people changing their listening preferences in a call. As such, you will be bombarded with Discord notifications unless you manually disable them. How to turn off Discord notifications Launch Discord on your computer and go to User Settings. Curtis Joe / Android Authority Click Notifications from the sidebar on the left. Curtis Joe / Android Authority Click the sliders next to Enable Desktop Notifications, Enable Unread Message Badge, and Enable Taskbar Flashing to turn them off. Curtis Joe / Android Authority Android and iOS Curtis Joe / Android Authority Disable push notifications for Discord on your smartphone. This is in your device's general settings, and the process will vary from device to device. Discord notifications have a distinct sound on the desktop version, and it can get incredibly annoying when they keep going off non-stop. To turn off Discord notification sounds, start by going to User Settings. Curtis Joe / Android Authority In User Settings, click Notifications. Curtis Joe / Android Authority Scroll down to the Sounds section. There are 18 sounds that you can go through and manually disable. Additionally, in a recent update, Discord added a Disable All Notification Sounds option which you can enable to stop all notification sounds at once. What are the 18 different notification sounds on Discord? The 18 Discord notification sounds are: Message Deafen Undeafen Mute Unmute Voice Disconnected PTT Activate PTT Deactivate User Join User Leave User Moved Outgoing Ring Incoming Ring Stream Started Stream Stopped Viewer Join Viewer Leave Invited to Speak Click Disable All Notification Sounds or manually disable the sounds you don't want. Curtis Joe / Android Authority When disabled, the sliders next to the sounds will be grey instead of green. Curtis Joe / Android Authority How to mute a user on Discord Curtis Joe / Android Authority Right-click a user on Discord. Hover your cursor over Mute @ [their username]. From the extended menu, choose how long you want to mute them. How to mute a server on Discord Curtis Joe / Android Authority Right-click the server you want to mute in your server list on the left side of the interface. Hover your cursor over Mute Server, then, from the extended menu, choose how long you want to mute that server. How to mute a channel on Discord Curtis Joe / Android Authority Right-click the channel you want to mute in that Discord server. Hover your cursor over Mute Channel, then, from the extended menu, choose how long you want to mute that channel. FAQs What does muting do on Discord? When you mute something on Discord, be it another user, a server, or a channel, you will stop getting notifications whenever there is a new message in that thread. If your friend messages you and you've muted them, their new message will still be in the conversation, but you will not receive a notification. If you have muted a server or a channel, new messages will not trigger notifications for you. That said, if someone pings you—meaning they type @ [your username] in their message—then you will still receive a notification. This is why people don't like being pinged. How do you stop all notifications from a server? Right-click that server, then click Notification Settings > Nothing. Additionally, you can suppress all role mentions. Notifications are essential, but they can become a distraction if you need to check your phone frequently. The musical presets in smartphones can be rather lackluster and perhaps a bit overwhelming at times. That's why it's best to assign priority tones for certain apps so that only the most important alerts grab your attention. Do you want an incoming email to beep differently from a calendar alert? Your smartphone can offer you a more welcoming and personalized experience. We'll show you how to set up custom sounds for each app so that critical notifications aren't drowned out. How to Set a Custom Alert Sound in Settings You can change and set up custom notification sounds via the default phone settings. Here's how to do this: On your device, navigate to Settings > Apps > Your apps. The menu names may be slightly different on some devices—for this guide, we'll be using a Samsung device. Find the app you wish to set a custom tone for and select it. On the app info page, tap Notifications and toggle on the slider button for Show notifications. You will be able to view a number of notification categories under the Other section on the Notifications page specific to each app, such as General or device-level notifications. Choose the appropriate category and select Alert. On the Notification category page, scroll down to the Sound section. It shows the default tone enabled for the app. Tap Sound and select your desired notification tone from the list to change the presets. How to Use Your Own Audio Files as Priority Tones Whether you prefer techno beats, classical strings, or ringtones that sound like vintage phones, the default ones just don't cut it at times. They're often generic or just a bit boring. When it comes to setting custom sounds for specific apps on your smartphone, you can record audio clips of your own or use existing songs in your music library. Let's take a look at how to do this. Step 1: Record Some Realistic Sound Clips With a little work, you can record some audio clips of your own using the pre-installed sound recorder app on your phone. You can also use apps such as Voice Recorder for the purpose. To edit your recordings, try using a free audio editing app to trim and transform the sound clips to the right length and file type. Some apps offer advanced features like multi-track editing, sound effects creation, and adding synthesized instruments' effects. After you've edited the recording to your liking, export it as an MP3 file and add it to your Notifications folder. For our example, we'll use MP3 Cutter and Ringtone Maker. Download: MP3 Cutter and Ringtone Maker (Free, in-app purchases available) Here's how you can edit your audio file: Install and launch the MP3 Cutter and Ringtone Maker app. Upload the recorded audio file. Adjust the Start and End handlebars to trim the clip to the required length. You also have the option of mixing in sound effects and merging audio files. Click on Save and export the file in MP3 format. Step 2: Set an MP3 as a Custom Alert Chances are, you might have a ton of music files downloaded on your smartphone. You can use them as a notification alert of sorts. To cut or trim audio files, follow the steps listed in the section above. Keep in mind that the audio file needs to be stored locally in the Notifications folder in your file manager app. Here's how to do this: On your device, open the My Files or the File Manager app. Navigate to Categories > Audio > Music folder(s). Select the MP3 file of your choice and tap Move. Navigate back to the notification folder in My Files > Categories > Audio > Notifications and tap Move here to transfer and store the file locally. Once done, go back to Settings > Apps > Your apps and select the app you wish to set up a custom alert for. Navigate to the Sound settings (as mentioned in the first section) and you'll now be able to see the music file added to the list. Tap on the file to set it up as your custom alert tone. Despite setting up custom notification alerts, you may be unable to hear your ringtone due to being in a noisy environment. To solve this, you can try setting a custom ringtone with a longer duration or try out some of these quick fixes to make event notifications ring out longer. Control Your Incoming Notifications With Custom Tones Most of us are bombarded by notifications on our smartphones all day long. Whether it's an alert from an important calendar app, or a message from a social media channel you follow, keeping track of your notifications can be difficult. Changing notification sounds and using custom tones for frequently-used apps is a great way to simplify alerts and personalize your notifications while keeping distractions at bay. Something went wrong. Wait a moment and try again. Change contact ringtones: Contacts > name > More > Set Ringtone, tap a ringtone, tap Save. Get custom sounds from an app like Zedge. Change default sound: Go to Apps & Notifications > Notifications > Advanced > Default notification sound, then choose a new sound. Change Messages and Gmail sounds via notification settings. In the Phone app, go to Settings > Sounds and vibration > Phone ringtone. This article explains how to change and customize Android notification sounds for text messages, calls, email, social media, and just about any app on your smartphone. Notification sounds are just one of many ways you can customize your Android, and each version of Android refines the process. Your Android has a setting for the default notification sound for all apps; you can also change sounds app by app. Here's how to change the default sound, and how to change the notification sounds for Google Messages, Gmail, and the Phone app. Open Contacts, tap the name, tap the three-dot menu, tap Set Ringtone, choose the desired ringtone from the list that appears, then tap Save. Open Settings. Tap Apps & Notifications. Tap Notifications. Scroll to the bottom of the screen and tap Advanced. Tap Default notification sound. Then you can browse the ringtones page, which is split into categories including My Sounds, Pixel Sounds, Classical Harmonies, and others. At the top, it says what the current default is. In this case, it's called Chime-Pixel Sounds. If you're using a non-Pixel phone, your ringtone options will be different. You can also change the notification sound in popular Android apps including Messages, Gmail, and the Phone app. If you get a lot of notifications and want to know without looking that it's a new text message, you can change the notification sound easily. Use your own sound or any of the sounds that come pre-loaded on your Android smartphone. Here's how to change the notification sound in the Google Messages app. Open the Google Messages app. Tap the three-dot menu in the top right. Tap Settings. Tap Notifications. Scroll down to Other. Tap Default. Tap Advanced. Tap Sound. If you don't see these menu options, look for Other notifications > Sound. You'll see the same options as above for the global default sound. Get lots of emails? Change the notification sound for any Gmail address that syncs with your smartphone. This way, you know by sound if you've got a new email, and whether it's personal or work-related. Here's how to change the notification sound in the Gmail app. Open the Gmail app. Tap the hamburger menu. Scroll down and tap Settings. Tap your email address. You can change the notifications sounds for each email address you have synced on your phone. Tap Manage notifications. Tap Advanced > Sound. Choose from the available options. Android smartphones from the same manufacturer, such as Google or Samsung usually have the same default ringtone. Thus, when several Google Pixel owners are in the same room, no one knows whose phone is ringing unless they've changed the default. Here's how to do it. Open the Phone app. Tap the three-dot menu in the top right. Tap Settings. Tap Sounds and vibration. Tap Phone ringtone. Choose from the available options. There are two ways to get custom sounds for your Android: downloading them from an app or creating your own. One popular app is called Zedge, which has thousands of free notification sounds and ringtones in all sorts of categories (music genres, sound effects, etc.). You can create and set custom ringtones right from the app. You can also create a custom sound from your favorite song or movie line, for example. In this case, you'll need to use an Android file manager to add the ringtone to your smartphone. Here's how to manually add a custom sound to your settings. Go to Settings > Apps & notifications > Notifications. Scroll down and tap Advanced > Default notification sound. Tap My Sounds, Tap + (plus sign). Find and select your custom sound. Your new ringtone should appear in the list of available ringtones in the My Sounds menu. FAQ How do I turn on the notification light on an Android? To set up flashing light notifications on an Android, tap Settings > Accessibility > Hearing > Flash Notifications. Next to Camera Light and Screen, turn on Flash Notifications. If your Android doesn't support flash notifications, check for third-party apps on the Google Play Store. How do I get rid of the AVG notification on Android? While you can't completely get rid of the "sticky" AVG Antivirus notification, you can minimize it. For Android 10 or later, tap and pull down the status bar, tap and hold the AVG notification, and then tap Details. Tap Sticky or Permanent, and select Minimize notifications. How do I show the notification number on apps in Android? To show notification numbers on app icon badges, open Settings and tap Notifications > App Icon Badges > Show With Number.
